Course description:

This survey course will provide a broad overview of significant movements and tendencies in American literature and culture in the 20th century. The lectures will focus on topics in American literature, film, drama, and the visual arts and will trace the major developments in these media over the course of the last century, paying particular attention to representational modes and conventions. The basic approach will be historicist in orientation, contextualizing various cultural phenomena within the larger historical nexus and in relation to changes in representational paradigms.
